

Jefferson to the Danbury Baptists

When he became president in 1801, Jefferson received a congratulatory note — along with a giant cheese — from Connecticut's Danbury Baptist Association. In this response, he affirmed his support for religious freedom and praised the 1st Amendment for “building a wall of separation between Church & State” to protect this important civil right.