

Jefferson to John Banister

Jefferson wrote this letter from France, to advise a Virginia friend about how to educate his son. He recommended modern subjects, such as foreign languages and the sciences. He also declared that a young American should not study abroad, lest he develop “a fondness for European luxury . . . and a contempt for the simplicity of his own country.”