

Jefferson to William Charles Jarvis

In this letter, Jefferson explained his opposition to giving final constitutional authority to any single institution or person—in this case, courts and judges. Having an educated citizenry, he argued, was the best way to uphold the Constitution and prevent officials from abusing their power.