

Jefferson to John Jay

In this letter to John Jay, Jefferson discussed the economy of the newly independent American republic. He believed that, with plentiful land and markets for their produce, Americans could--and should--remain a nation of farmers. Agriculture, Jefferson maintained, encouraged independence, virtue, and good citizenship.