

Jefferson to James Madison

In 1809, as Napoleon conquered most of Europe, the recently retired Jefferson imagined the U.S. as a different kind of empire. In contrast to European empires ruled by "despots," Jefferson wanted an American empire grounded in principles of liberty and equality. Expansion would ensure the prosperity and freedom of the republic and its citizens.