

Abraham Lincoln's Address at Independence Hall

A month before he took office, president-elect Lincoln gave this speech in which he explained why he could not accept the secession of the southern states. The Declaration of Independence, he argued, inspired the creation of the Union, which depended on democracy--or majority rule--to protect the people's liberties and rights.