

The Federalist Papers No. 45

In this essay, James Madison argues that the expanded powers of the central government under the proposed U.S. Constitution would not endanger the state governments. Writing under the name of "Publius," Madison, along with John Jay and Alexander Hamilton, published 85 FEDERALIST essays in order to support the ratification of the Constitution.