

The Federalist Papers No. 9

In this essay, Alexander Hamilton argues that a strong central government with powers such as the ability to raise troops was essential to the survival of the union. Writing under the name of "Publius," Hamilton, along with John Jay and James Madison, published 85 FEDERALIST essays to support the ratification of the Constitution.