

Jefferson to Robert Pleasants

Jefferson wrote this letter to Robert Pleasants, a Virginia Quaker and anti-slavery leader, in August 1796. Months earlier, another Virginian, St. George Tucker, had published a plan for the gradual abolition of slavery in the state. Here, Jefferson—who took no public position on Tucker’s plan—argued that enslaved people must be educated before receiving their freedom.