

Report of the Commissioners for the University of Virginia

In this report, Jefferson and his fellow commissioners planned the new University of Virginia. Jefferson founded a public university, but in his time “public” meant that the state would help finance the education of white males who showed intellectual promise and leadership potential. Most students would, in fact, be from wealth families.