

NY Merchants Non-Importation Agreement

This document records the response of New York City merchants to the Stamp Act. In order to express their opposition to the measure, merchants agreed among themselves not to import any good from England until the Act was repealed. They hoped that economic pressure would force Parliament to withdraw the taxes passed without the colonists' consent.