

John Adams to Timothy Pickering

In this letter, John Adams recalls the process of drafting the Declaration of Independence. He praises Thomas Jefferson for his eloquence and lofty prose. He also approves of a passage against slavery which the Continental Congress subsequently deleted. He notes that the Declaration is less Jefferson's original composition than a reflection of many previously expressed ideas.