

John Adams to the Comte de Sarsfield

In this letter, John Adams, the American minister to France, writes to a French nobleman about his vision for America's future. Despite the difficulties the U.S. was experiencing immediately after the American Revolution, Adams believed that the country would remain a defender of liberty, free from the corrupting influences of monarchy and aristocracy.