

Jefferson to Jean Nicolas Demeunier

As Jefferson explained here, Virginia's leaders considered the gradual abolition of slavery in their state during the 1780s. Jefferson himself was a diplomat in Paris when the state's legislators debated the issue. He said he regretted that the law they enacted allowed masters to free their slaves but did not provide for a general emancipation.